CHALLENGE

Historically, the team has used several tools to monitor and troubleshoot the technical performance of their customer's websites. While useful, the tools were not revealing how technical issues were affecting the website from a business perspective.

As a customer-centric company, Bright Owl Digital was often challenged with having to quickly find and replicate technical issues raised directly by site users via customer service teams. Diligent research of issues could be lengthy and require multiple resources in order to uncover the root causes and frequencies of events.

The team also needed a strong alerting system to provide real-time notifications of critical site errors before they were noticed or reported by visitors. Bright Owl Digital wanted to minimize any disruption to the visitor journey and the customer's bottom line.

- 200 – The requested qty exceeds the maximum qty allowed in shopping cart
- 200 – The requested qty is not available
- 200 – Product that you are trying to add is not available.
- 200 – We can't add this item to your shopping cart right now.
- 200 – The fewest you may purchase is 3

SOLUTION

Following a Webeyez introduction at "Magento Live" Europe, Bright Owl Digital Director Ethan Roberts moved quickly to implement Webeyez into several client websites.

The Webeyez smart alerts engine quickly revealed important business and technical insights that were clear and immediately actionable by Bright Owl Digital's development teams.

Additionally, Webeyez identified the specific root causes and frequencies of events and gave useful information including detailed error logs, stack traces and session recordings, saving Bright Owl Digital valuable QA and developer time for fixing issues rather than trying to replicate them in the first instance.

Today, Bright Owl Digital leverages Webeyez to identify critical events in customer websites as quickly as possible. Webeyez helps the team prioritize and plan future developments based on performance metrics and user journey data.
